It looks like DSL Extreme is the first major ISP to strike a deal to resell Verizon FiOS service, the company today announcing the launch of "Fiber Extreme" service. According to the DSL Extreme press release, the company is now offering customers FTTH speeds up to 50Mbps. The press release doesn't mention Verizon or FiOS anywhere, though a DSL Extreme tech has been providing additional information in our DSL Extreme forum.

or Static IPs for business clients.

Inbound port 80 is blocked on residential and dynamic IP business accounts, but port 80 is opened on business accounts with static IPs. The company says they're offering free setup and a free router lease for their $39.95 10Mbps/2Mbps tier with a one year contract.

If you compare DSL Extreme and FiOS prices you'll note that DSL Extreme is selling the 50Mbps tier for substantially less than Verizon does ($99 versus $145). Based on our conversations with other ISPs trying to strike similar deals with Verizon, DSL Extreme is likely working with some pretty narrow profit margins under this deal.

Perhaps its time for DSL Extreme to change their name to something a little less, oh, coppery?
